THOUSANDS WILL PAY TRIBUTE TO JOHN MCLAREN ON SUNDAY AFTERNOON AT NEW CITY PARK

President Of San Francisco Board Of Education Will Speak

Thousands of boys and girls and public spirited adults will pay tribute to John McLaren, the man who has made San Francisco a city of beautiful parks, at ceremonies in John McLaren Park, next Sunday, June 13.

Mayor Angelo Rossi, who will act as honorary chairman at the Sunday program, officially proclaimed June 13, 1937, as second annual John McLaren Day. In his proclamation he invited all citizens, and especially the children of the city, to gather at McLaren Park, which ranks in size next to the Golden Gate Park, at 1:30 p. m. to celebrate the day fittingly.

TO PARTICIPATE

Youth organizations from all parts of the city will participate, as will all agencies of the Recreation Council of the Community Chest, the public schools of San Francisco, playgrounds of the city, and the Second District of Parents and Teachers.

Orator of the day will be C. Harold Caulfield, president of the board of education. Chairman of the day is J. J. Lermen of the San Francisco Park Commission.

The executive committee for John McLaren Day celebration are Florence Friedman, chairman; Mrs. Joseph A. Garry, Mrs. Dorothy Spencer and Lloyd Wilson. Twenty-

"BLIND ALLEY" HOLDS INTEREST OF FULL HOUSE

Author Differs With Views Of Psychiatrists, Lawyers

Psychiatrists and lawyers have been known to declare that crooks have no imagination and low reasoning powers. But the author of "Blind Alley," James Warwick, thinks differently. He believes criminals have imagination and reasoning powers, but are afraid to make use of them. On this hypothesis, Warwick has written the play, which was unveiled for the first time in San Francisco at the Alcazar Theater, Wednesday evening of this week, as a Federal Theater production.

Perhaps the reason the gentry above named have come to their conclusion, says Warwick in effect, is that they haven't come in close enough contact with crooks to find out. Professor Shelby, in "Blind Alley," did. Gangsters, in fact, took possession of his house and family one evening, awaiting a getaway, and the college psychology professor made the most of this opportunity. He proved himself a real psychologist, in fact, so real that he finished up by causing the crook to—but there, go and see for yourself.

ENTERTAINING

"Blind Alley" is deeply entertaining and absorbing enough to hold an audience, as it did this week. Comedy arises from the difference in the language of the crook and the professor, and in the remarks of the small son of the household and stage Irish cook.

Gordon Wickland as Dr. Shelby, Martina Pawley as his wife, Anthony Ward as the principal gangster, littile Marvin Lee Dubin as the kid, and Arthur Gardner, Frances Hall, Ethel Soule, Margo Duse, Pierce Lyden, Clifford Ainsley and Frank DuFrane all do excellent work.

ELECT SCHOOL BOARD MEMBERS HERE TUESDAY

Mrs. Stella Jensen, Andrew Vireno And Louis Nava Receive Majorities

One member to the San Mateo Junior College Board of Trustees (Jefferson Union High School District is now a part of the junior college district), two members to the Jefferson Union High School Board and one member to the Jefferson Elementary School Board were elected here Tuesday of this week.

Mrs. Stella Jensen was elected to the junior college post, Mrs. Stella Jensen and Andrew Vireno were elected to the high school board. Louis Nava was elected elementary trustee.

A last minute write in campaign was instigated in the balloting.

Catholic Vacation Club Holds Meet

Catholic Boys and Girls Vacation Club held its first meeting, Monday of this week, at the home of Mrs. Grace George, Visitacion avenue. These meetings will take place daily at 9:30 a. m., except Saturdays and Sundays.

After a short devotional period there will be games, handicraft, story telling and hikes. Next week and the following week Reverend Leo Schmidt of the Visitacion Valley Church will provide the children with a series of motion pictures.

Sunday mass will be celebrated in the Brisbane Fire Hall during the vacation period at 9:15 o'clock. The Thursday evening show for the benefit of the building fund will be resumed after the reopening of school.

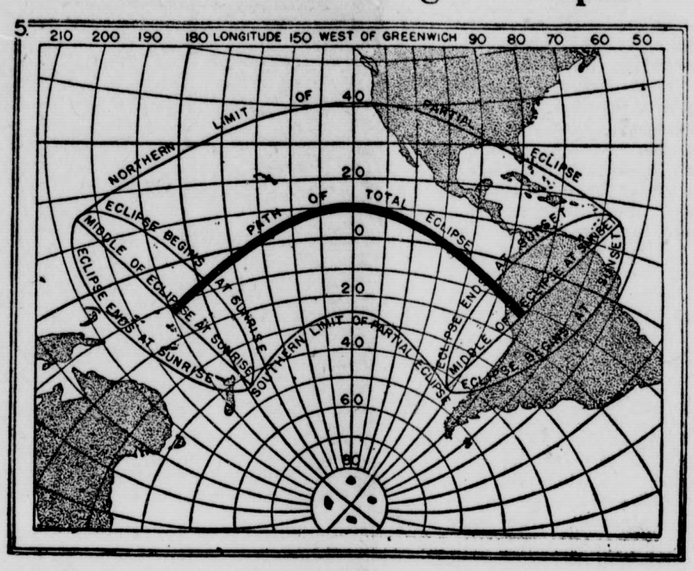
Path Of Sun's Longest Eclipse



Because it crossed the international date line from east to west in midpacific, the recent total eclipse of the sun began on June 9—a day after it ended, June 8. On tiny coral Canton Island, in midpacific, a group of American scientists spent days erecting apparatus to photograph the eclipse during its 213 seconds, longest total eclipse in 1200 years. Three hours later the spectacle of the heavens moved eastward and was recorded from Callan Peak, in Peru's Julca Mountains. Thousands of school children viewed a partial eclipse at Lick Observatory, near San Jose, Cal. Chart shows the path of the longest eclipse on record.

Woman Kills Self In Car On Coastside

San Mateo County coastside was the setting for another suicide, Wednesday of this week.

The latest victim of death by carbon monoxide poisoning was Mrs. Thea Marsi Simon, 36, estranged wife of a San Francisco millinery manufacturer and member of a one time wealthy Austrian family who came to this country after the World War.

Her body was found in her gas-filled automobile about 10:30 a. m. by John Keenan, a San Francisco trucker, as he drove along the Pedro Mountain road near Pedro Point.

Mrs. Simon had parked her car, a rented machine obtained from a Los Angeles agency, off the side of the road and attached a hose to the exhaust of the coupe and run the tube into the automobile.

Deputy Coroner Louella Pepper of Daly City reported the death to Coroner William Crosby. Mrs. Pepper had been summoned by the truck driver. She took the body to the W. C. Lasswell mortuary in Daly City.

Southern Council Install Officers

Southern Council of Civic Clubs will hold its eighteenth installation and banquet on Saturday evening of next week, June 19, at 7 o'clock in Topsy's Roost, 660 Great Highway, near the Cliff House at the beach. William J. Varley, who has presided over this body for the past eight years, will be installed for another term.

In addition to Varley, the following will be installed: vice presidents M. F. Coll, G. H. Allen, K. J. Foley, W. P. Shields, J. P. Gilmore; secretary, Dr. G. B. Harper; treasurer, Viola E. Giesen; legal advisor, A. S. Fiore, and sergeant, W. S. Salisbury.

An attendance of 200 or 300 guests is expected and the largest banquet hall has been retained for the occasion.

Vagabond Sketches

Imperial Germany seems to be staging a comeback. At least the attitudes of the Nazi Government appear imperialistic.

With General Goering shouting "Blood must be paid by blood," anything might happen in Europe. But how the Nazis will try to justify their hostilities against Spain remains to be seen.

Meanwhile, in spite of Germany's high handed actions, the Spanish civil war takes on a new light. With the death of the rebel General Mola, the Loyalists are pushing back their foes, for history has often shown that a liberty loving people will not easily submit to the heel of despotism.

Man Is Injured In Tank Explosion

One man was critically burned late Tuesday of this week when a blast shook a Southern Pacific tank car being cleaned on a siding near the Bayshore City yards.

The mishap occurred on a siding of the Mohawk Oil Company about 100 yards south of the San Francisco line in San Mateo County.

MUMBLES NAME

Taken to Mission Emergency Hospital, the victim, after regaining consciousness, identified himself as "Happy" Moses.

The condition of the man was declared critical by hospital attendants.

Moses' life is believed to have been spared by a mask which he wore while at work in the car. He was sandblasting the car to clean it of gasoline. It was being prepared to carry wine, witnesses said.

According to first reports from witnesses, Moses is believed to have slipped in the car, dropping an electric light which he was using. The light is believed to have set off a spark.

KNOCKED SENSELESS

In the ensuing blast, Moses was rendered unconscious as flames shot over him, burning him over most of the body.

The Mohawk Oil Company station, on whose siding the mishap occurred, was reported endangered by the blast.

The roar of the blast was heard over a large area, witnesses said.

PLAN HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATION EXERCISES FOR APPROXIMATELY HUNDRED JEFFERSON STUDENTS

Details Of Commencement Program Are Now Complete

Principal James Ferguson announced this week that approximately 100 students will be graduated from Jefferson Union High School, Wednesday of next week, June 16. Annual commencement exercises will be held in the high school auditorium.

The graduation program includes: Entrance of graduates, the high school orchestra, directed by R. J. Stevens, playing "Processional"; invocation, Rev. H. D. Harkins; address, "We Look Back," David Gaggero, president of the Jefferson Union High School student body; address, "Horace Mann," Dorothy Lewis; musical selections from Rossini and Sibelius, high school a cappella chorus; address, "The New Education," Eleanor Baker; address, "We Look Ahead," Dale Hilts; musical selections from Wagner and Liliuokelani, a cappella; presentation of the graduating class, Principal James Ferguson; conferring of diplomas, Andrew Vireno and Mrs. Stella Jensen, members of the Board of Trustees; benediction, Rev. John Marchisio, and retiring march of the graduates, orchestra playing "Recessional."

Members of the Jefferson Union High School Honor Society and junior scholars will serve as ushers.

WORKERS TOLD TO GET SOCIAL SECURITY CARDS

Field representatives of unemployment compensation and federal old age benefits were instructed to inform persons over 65 years of age that their application for social security account numbers is for records of unemployment compensation only.

This announcement was made by the executive director of the state department of employment, and the regional director of the social security board.

Some confusion exists among those persons over 65 who on instructions from the social security board in Washington applied for social security cards.

Many believe this application entitles them to old age benefits, when in reality, they were instructed to apply for purposes of unemployment compensation record keeping only.

RACING SEASON IN FULL SWING AT BADEN CLUB

Nation's Fastest Greyhounds Participate In 11 Races Nightly

California's racing season is in full swing at Baden Kennel Club, where some of the nation's fastest greyhounds pursue the electrical lure in eleven races nightly. The only track in California to stage summer racing, Baden has proved to be the mecca for thousands of regular patrons and for out of state visitors here on vacation.

More than 36,000 attended the first five nights of racing, it is estimated, with crowds on the increase this week.

Formful racing, outshining anything previously offered in greyhound competition on the Coast, is being established at the South San Francisco track this season. Statisticians have figured that of the first 55 races, 27 were won by the popular favorites.

Championship of the season may stay with a San Mateo County kennel, according to present indications. Andrew's Pride, bred, raised and developed in this county by P. J. Olmo of Colma, far outshines any other dog at the track to date, and his littermate, Mike Andrews, is a close second.

A fast field of young dogs has been introduced at the meeting, and before many weeks have passed one of these may be rated fast enough to give the two San Mateo County dogs a race.

A gala program of eleven races featuring the top greyhounds in training will be offered tomorrow night.

MANY EXPECTED TO ATTEND LIVERMORE RODEO

Festivities Open Saturday With Famous Annual Pioneer Parade

Two days of big league rodeo events will attract throngs to Livermore next Saturday and Sunday, June 12 and 13, for the annual Livermore Rodeo. Providing a major feature of the rodeo season in California, the Livermore program promises again to draw a heavy attendance. A lively flow of inquiries from those planning to drive to Livermore for the week end of exciting action is reported by motorists organizations.

Festivities will open Saturday morning with Livermore's famous annual pioneer parade. The rodeo will be held Saturday and Sunday afternoon, presenting scores of features that will cover the full list of rodeo sports.

The programs will include bronco riding, steer riding, calf roping, double roping, steer decorating, stock horse contests, fancy riding and roping, relay races for men and girls, roman racing, pony express racing, and relay racing.

Brisbane Firemen Respond To Alarms

Sports Nicknames Really a Subject for Deep Scholar

EVERY now and then when one of the more erudite writing masters runs short of rhetorical pearls he glances at the poor folks on the other side of the newspaper railroad tracks. Then he lifts his hands in horror and, when he brings them down on a typewriter, another little gem of a column dealing with sports nicknames is completed.

It is a good racket with soft hours and probably I will be labelled as a green-eyed popinjay for bringing up the subject. Yet, for the life of me, I cannot understand why these high clerics of the literary world dispose of this pet sports assignment with such superficial sneers.

For instance, a scholar might spend some hours tracing to its source the nickname of some famous baseball player. Where did he get the monicker and why? Is he still called by the name which distinguished him from his fellows in college or sandlot days? Or has he had a progressive series of such titles while developing from farm team to farm team on the way to the big time?

After the scholar gets that over with he can be faced with other troubles. More often than not the great athlete may have three nicknames—one known only to the artists who do occasional favors to the world by writing pieces about sports, one by which he is usually referred to when fans or practicing sports writers mention him, one seldom used except in the family circle of his teammates.

There was Christy Mathewson. "Matty" or "Big Six" are the names by which this great pitcher is most familiarly remembered by those who paid to see him play. That other Bucknell alumnus, Moose McCormick, recalls though that teammates seldom used such a handle. They called him "Gummy." The name was derived from the fact that when he first entered the majors Mathewson floundered around in the field as if he were wearing gum boots.

Similarly there was the name which Mel Ott has outgrown only within the past season or two. In 1927 the very youthful Ott, already a regular outfielder, was warming up near the first-base boxes. "My, my," exclaimed a lady fan. "Just look at him. Isn't he the spirit of springtime." From thenceforth, in the privacy of Giants' dugout and bridge games, Ott was "Springtime."

How Kiki Cuyler Got His Monicker

Occasionally the obvious thought as to the origin of a nickname is not correct or only partly so. Witness Kiki Cuyler. Cuyler came into baseball close to the time when Belasco was achieving success with one of his best remembered productions. So a quick conclusion would be that the Reds' outfielder's nickname came because of his fancied resemblance to the character so well portrayed by Miss Leonore Ulric. Probably the fame of the play is what really did make the name stick to Cuyler throughout all the years. But actually the names have little in common in way of pronunciation. Cuyler got his title because when playing center his two outfield mates used to yell "Cuy" "Cuy" when he was to take the ball.

Kiki Cuyler

Sometimes an athlete may have two or three private nicknames even while sojourning with his mates. This is particularly true of the Yankees whose most affectionate name for the man variously known as "The Babe," "The Bam," and "The Big Feller," was "Jidgie."

Strangely enough some appropriate names fade in the big time. Lon Warneke, for instance, still is known as "Country" down in Arkansas although none of his big city friends would think of calling him that. By the same token baptismal names are not entirely barred in sports.

Two of them pop into mind. Mrs. Dean would as soon start another war with Jack Miley as call her Dizzy anything save "Jay." And at Belmont the other day I heard a veteran friend refer to Pompoon's trainer, widely acclaimed in the press as "Humpty Dan" Clark as, of all names, "Cyril."

NOT IN THE BOX SCORE:

KEEP an eye on Keller, the former University of Maryland outfielder now hitting so hard for Newark. High Yankee authorities suspect the youth will outclass even such bright young men as Di Maggio and Henrich in another season . . . Also watch Rosar, a swell catcher who may have a bit of arm trouble but who slugs like Dickey; Gordon, the infielder, and Pitcher Donald, a kid who has all the poise of an Alexander out there on the mound. That's only the pick of the crop from one farm and so you may as well name the Yankees to win the flag in 1939 and 1940, too.

Joe Di Maggio hit his first home runs of both the 1936 and 1937 seasons on the same day of the month, May 10 . . . Young Freddy Kammer, the former Princeton hockey and baseball star, is giving the Jersey courses such a workout that he might be a good long shot (very long, though) in the amateur golf championship this year . . . Benny Valger, the French Flash who now manages Frankie DeLillo, hasn't a mark on him to show that he participated in 464 ring battles . . . George Conway, who trains War Admiral, won the Belmont Futurity with Proctor Knott in 1887.

Tip for the Davis Cup daddies—"There's a husky seventeen-year-old youngster named Bill Cleveland playing on the Exeter tennis team who has all the elements of greatness. Switched from diamond to court only this spring, too." . . . The Cubs will travel 15,541 miles this year to appear in their seventy-seven away from home National League games . . . Midget Wolgast, former flyweight champion (the limit for that class is 112 pounds), was announced as weighing 136 pounds when he appeared in Philadelphia recently.

Probably distance still averages its best licks while lending enchantment to the view but sometimes even Shylock would be embarrassed by the reaction to the loan. For instance there was that group of celebrated golf pros gabbing in a locker room the other day. Not one of them agreed with public tradition which makes Bobby Jones golfdom's all-time greatest. The records, they said, proved that his game was not as effective over a long period as was that of several other top flight performers.

Bobby Jones

They were talking merely about men with whom they had matched wood and iron from tee to green. Henry Picard, himself likely to be remembered with the best, is the only one who need be quoted here. He says that, stroke for stroke, Light Horse Harry Cooper is the greatest golfer he has ever seen.

In Transit is one of the most appropriately named thoroughbreds. He was foaled on a train while his dam, Peggy Amour, was en route to Montana . . . Jack Coffey, Fordham's graduate manager, will tour South America with Mrs. Coffey this summer . . . Al Politis, former Fordham end, recently was made prosecuting attorney in his New Britain home town . . . Mike Miskinis, great blond tackle in the Cavanaugh Ram regime, recently passed the New York state bar.

Why don't the Cards make more use of Outfielder Padgett who looked so good down South? . . . Chicago fans hope the Dodgers' directors get red necked again this year and, in the midst of their ire, send another such good player as Lonny Frey to the Windy City . . . Could it be true that the short Preakness price of War Admiral was largely due to $100,000 worth of comeback money being dumped into the machines by that New Jersey bookie syndicate?

A. Gordon (Dean) Murray calls attention to something that most Ivy Leaguers, whose memories go back almost fifty years, could scarcely have noted last winter. That was the death of Charlie Dana, one of the first college ball players to have big time clubs begging him to sign. Dana, still recalled as the greatest of all Princeton first baseman, performed in the early 1890s. He was the Tiger batter who gave a great Yale pitcher named Amos Alonzo Stagg more headaches than ever came later from years of coaching Chicago's football teams.

Tom Henrich, the boy who carries one of the biggest Yankee bats, made his first appearance as a Yankee in a batboy's uniform. That was during an exhibition game at West Point, just before the start of the season. Henrich had joined the club on such short notice that there was no time to fit him to a uniform. So they stripped the batboy, made a quick exhange of costume, and sent the stocky little Tom into action.

Jake Flowers, the old Cardinal and Dodger infielder, is writing scenarios in Hollywood . . . Every member of the Athletics' squad, except Earl Mack and Lena Blackburne, coaches, addresses Connie Mack as Mr. Mack. . . . Earl calls him Dad and Blackburne Boss. . . . Second Baseman Tony Lazzeri has teamed with three shortstops, Mark Koenig, Lyn Lary, and Frank Crosetti, since joining the Yankees in 1926, and all have been fellow Californians . . . Matty Bell, head football coach at Southern Methodist university, claims that the best high school football is played in Texas.

WHY DID THE HINDENBURG CRASH?

Cause Is Still Uncertain, Though Use of Helium Would Have Prevented It. But Uncle Sam Owns All the Helium!

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

"THERE must be no more flying with hydrogen. We must make an about face. We must use helium."

Thus spoke Dr. Hugo Eckener, he who is known as the world's greatest authority on lighter-than-air craft, after being informed that Germany's proud Hindenburg had crashed spectacularly upon completing her maiden 1937 Atlantic crossing at Lakehurst, N. J.

There have been several theories advanced as possible causes of the disaster, but no one is yet sure which is the correct one, and it is doubtful if anyone ever will be.

Sabotage was suggested, merely that no possibility be overlooked, and immediately rejected.

It might have been static electricity which set off the highly explosive hydrogen gas. All aircraft are apt to accumulate it, especially when flying through or near a thunderstorm. But this seems unlikely in the case of the Hindenburg, for her ground lines had been down three minutes before the crash, and presumably all charges of static electricity would have passed into the earth.

Spontaneous Combustion?

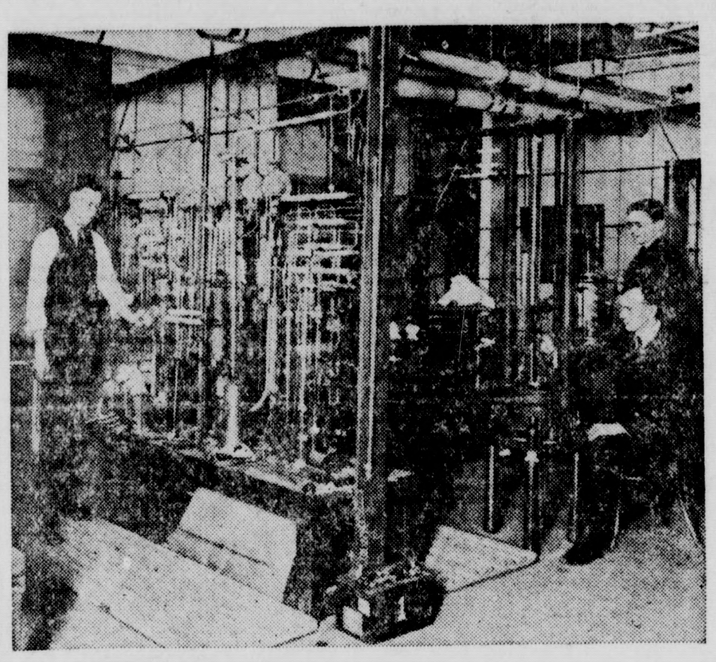
Another theory, more complicated than the others, was that of Prof. Otto Stern, of Carnegie Institute of Technology, and formerly connected with the Zeppelin works in Germany. Professor Stern expressed wonderment that the accident had not happened sooner, due to peculiar action of the proton of the hydrogen atom.

The hydrogen proton, he explained, is charged with positive electricity, which is offset by a charge of negative electricity in the electron, which covers the proton like a shell. When the gas is leaking under presssure, many of the protons lose their electrons, and race madly about seeking new ones. This causes spontaneous combustion.

So rapidly did the flames engulf the ship, the versions of witnesses as to the cause were varied (fire swept from one end of the Hindenburg to the other in 32 seconds). Several insisted, however, the rear port engine was throwing sparks from its exhaust as the ship came to the mooring mast. The theory considered most probable at the time of this writing is that these sparks, whipped by the wind, perhaps, ignited hydrogen being valved out as the ship came down. It is customary to valve gas in landing.

Whether one of the conditions cited in this brief review was the cause of the explosion, or whether the true cause has not yet even been suggested, one thing is certain: An explosion of the highly inflammable hydrogen gas wrecked the airship. And no such explosion could have occurred had the Hindenburg been filled with inert, non-inflammable helium gas. Thereby hangs a tale.

The Germans are the only nation which has continued to make progress with lighter-than-air craft. The United States abandoned it when a series of dirigible crashes culminated in the loss of the Macon off Point Sur, California, February 12, 1934. Great Britain said, "No more dirigibles!" when the R-101 crashed October 4, 1930, with 46 on board, including prominent ministers, at Beauvais, France. France forsook airships when the Dixmude disappeared December 21, 1923, presumably having been destroyed by lightning over the Mediterranean.

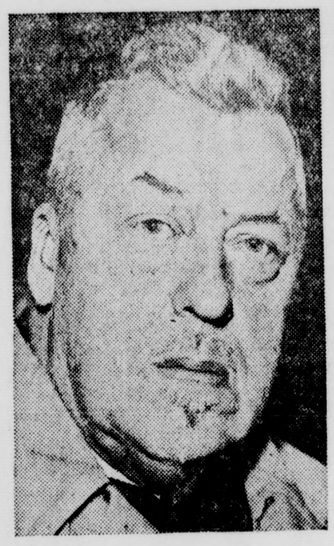


Employees of the United States bureau of mines at work in the cryogenic laboratory, where research data necessary for helium production and purification are developed.

U. S. Owns All Helium.

But the Hindenburg accident has convinced the Germans that they can no longer operate their ships with hydrogen. And where are they to obtain helium? The United States has a monopoly on all the world's helium! Only in American natural gas does helium exist in sufficient quantity to extract and fill airships. On the present basis our government is not permitting other nations to buy its helium, despite the fact that our navy is without airships to use it. The only airship we have left, the Los Angeles, which Germany turned over to us as part of the spoils of war, is over age, decommissioned and in hangar at Lakehurst.

Hydrogen, the lightest gas known, is the most practical for airships, except for the fact that it is also one of the most explosive things on earth when mixed with air in the right proportion. Helium has not quite the lift of hydrogen, but it is safe.



Dr. Hugo Eckener, Zeppelin expert, who says all airships must now be inflated with helium.

"He 4," as helium is known by its chemical formula, is described as "an inert, non-oxidizable, colorless, gaseous element of density 1.98." Sir Norman Lockyer was the first to discover it. During the eclipse of 1868 he detected its existence in the sun; it was a bright yellow line in the solar spectrum which could not be associated with the spectrum of any element then known. He suggested the name for the element, which is taken from "helios," the Greek word for sun.

In 1895 Sir William Ramsay found that when the mineral uranite was decomposed by acid it gave off a gas which would not combine with oxygen to "burn." Further, when examined spectroscopically by means of an electric discharge, it showed a bright yellow spectral line which Sir William identified with that which Lockyer had found in the solar spectrum. He assigned to the new element the name which Lockyer had suggested for it.

Germans Lucky in Past.

The United States, with her plenteous supply of helium, has used it in operating her airships, but the Germans have always been slightly skeptical about the American enthusiasm for the gas. It is, next to hydrogen, the lightest gas known, yet its pay load efficiency is 20 per cent less. Despite this fact, hydrogen costs about $2.50 per 1,000 cubic feet as against many times that amount for helium. At that rate it can't be wasted cheerfully in maneuvering a ship.

Up to the time of the Hindenburg crash, the Germans had been very expert—and not a little lucky—in handling their many airships without losses due to fire and explosion. The Hindenburg was the 129th of a noble line (the official number of the ship was LZ-129). Of her predecessors, 10 were never completed, 25 were lost by storm and accident, 6 by causes unknown, 21 were dismantled, 46 were wrecked by the war, 11 were turned over to the Allies after the war and 7 were sabotaged that they need not be surrendered. The Graf Zeppelin and the Los Angeles are the only ones left. The old Graf carries on like the veteran she is, her comings and goings between Germany and South America hardly occasioning comment any more. She landed at Frankfort from Rio de Janiero the day after the disaster, with 23 passengers, and was immediately grounded indefinitely. She will not take off again without helium.

Before the World war helium was worth hundreds of dollars per cubic foot. It was obtained from minerals such as cleveite, fergusonite, monazite, thorianite, and other radioactive minerals, as well as the uranite used by Ramsay. But it was not until war-time that the United States bureau of mines solved the problem of producing it from natural gas in quantities sufficient to inflate giant airships. The victory of the bureau is considered an epic of science.

The first war-time helium plant was at Petrolia, Texas, but the compressors and other apparatus for extraction were later moved to Amarillo, a better location. Here the government has a complete plant producing helium from a gas field which is one of the world's richest in the inert, non-inflammable gas.

Nazis Never Enthusiastic.

In addition, far-sighted Uncle Sam has established helium reserves in just the way that he has oil reserves.

In the past steps have been taken to permit the sale of Uncle Sam's helium to Nazi Germany, to insure the safety of airship flight, but Germany had never been overanxious or insistent. Indeed, one version has it that the United States offered helium to the Zeppelin company, but certain German experts considered the expense of the safer gas too great for commercial use and, furthermore, cited the greater lifting power of hydrogen.

The President has been given discretionary power to sell helium to a foreign nation, if he has the recommendation of the secretaries of interior, war and navy.

According to Watson Davis, director of Science Service, to whom the writer is indebted for much of his information, "There is admittedly a war angle to this question of whether America should relinquish even to a limited extent its nature-given monopoly of helium. But there was a growing feeling that the airship line across the Atlantic should be made as safe as possible. That would mean extending to Germany the courtesy of helium, just as the navy has given them the facilities of its Lakehurst airship station, the only suitable landing field for airships in eastern United States."

Sacramento.—In the first three months of 1937 the number of pleasure cars registered in California exceeded 2,000,000, Howard E. Deems, Registrar, announced. During this time 2,007,486 automobiles were registered as compared with 1,875,065 in the same period last year, an increase of 7.18 per cent. Total fee paid registration increased from 2,072,284 in 1936 to 2,232,415 for this year, an increase of 7.73 per cent.

Denied Reward

Sacramento.—The Third District Court of Appeals has ruled that Mrs. Martha Brite had no claim on Siskiyou County for a $1,000 reward for "turning in" her sons, John and Coke. The decision held that neither the supervisors nor the district attorney had the authority to offer the reward. The mother of the convicted killers, now awaiting execution in Folsom prison, arranged for her sons to surrender to the district attorney after they had eluded posses for more than a month in the wild mountain Siskiyou country. She said then she wanted them to have a "fair trial."

Wild Dogs Attack

A pack of wild dogs, believed to be crazed from hunger, attacked two men and a boy, severely injuring them, in the open country east of Bakersfield. State police caught three of the animals and tests for rabies have been ordered. The officers said, however, that they believed hunger, not rabies, had impelled them to the attack. Louis Espinoza, 29 years of age, told police the pack first set upon him, knocked him down, and was tearing at his flesh when Refugio Tina, 35, and Rito Barajas, 15, appeared and attempted to rescue him. The dogs then turned on the other two. Patricio Ortega reported a similar attack.

Postoffice Dedicated

Santa Maria.—Santa Maria's first Federal-owned postoffice has been dedicated. The building, in Spanish Mediterranean architectural design, was erected at a cost of $84,000. The first postoffice was established in Santa Maria sixty-two years ago and the service has been conducted in leased buildings until now. A feature of the dedication was the planting of a tree in memory of the late Representative H. E. Stubbs. Postmaster Michel J. O'Rourke of Beverly Hills represented Postmaster-General Farley. Postoffice Inspector R. C. Knox of Los Angeles delivered the dedicatory address.

Washington. — President Roosevelt has signed a bill authorizing establishment of a naval air station at Alameda, Calif., at a cost not to exceed $13,500,000. A provision inserted by the House and later accepted by the Senate, however, would prevent beginning construction until title to certain property adjacent to Benton Field, former Navy field, is conveyed to the Navy Department. An appropriation of $1,000,000 is available to begin work without further action by Congress, Navy Committee attaches said.

Japanese Rooster Needs Four Train Bearers

Four Japanese children seem to get a big thrill from acting as train-bearers to this prize rooster, held by the proud owner. This type of fowl is common in rural areas of Japan, where the hobby of the farm folk is raising long-tailed chickens. The longer the tail, the more valuable the bird. They take extraordinary care of their pets to preserve the luxuriant appendages.

Bedtime Story for Children

PETER RABBIT WATCHES FOR SIGNS

SOME people never see things because they never look for them. Peter Rabbit isn't that kind. My goodness, no! Peter is all the time looking and listening. You see, he is dreadfully afraid that he will miss something. So every minute that he is awake he is looking and listening. It was this way more than ever now. Sister South Wind had arrived and said that Mistress Spring was not far behind, and that she had come to waken all the sleepers so that they would be ready to greet Mistress Spring when she did arrive.

He Would Carefully Cover Her Over Again With the Dead Leaves That She Might Not Catch Cold.

What puzzled Peter was how gentle Sister South Wind, whose voice was hardly more than a whisper, waked all the sleepers. Rough Brother North Wind had roared and whistled and bowled through the Green Forest and over the Green Meadows all the long winter without waking one. In fact, the louder he roared the farther into dreamland the sleepers seemed to go. But when the gentle Sister South Wind wandered through the Green Forest and over the Green Meadows calling in just the lowest, softest voice,

Wake up, wake up, you sleepers!
Come open wide your peepers!

why, one after another they did wake up. Peter couldn't understand it, and finally he gave up trying to.

But it was great fun to go about watching for signs that the sleepers had heard gentle Sister South Wind. Peter would listen with one long ear against a maple tree. He would hear just the softest little sound under the bark, so soft that you and I couldn't hear it if we tried. Then Peter would kick up his heels for joy. It was the sap running up to all the branches and out to the tiniest twigs of the maple tree that Peter heard, and he knew that the maple tree was awake.

Then he would go over to a swampy place where the ice had melted away and hold his nose while he peeped into the brown hood of the skunk cabbage to see if there were any signs of flowers there. It had a dreadful smell, and yet it made Peter feel glad all over, because it meant that the queer little plant was awake. Then he would go up in the Green Forest to a warm, sunny place he knew of and there he would pull away the dead leaves of last summer until he found a tiny, furry cap peeping up above the ground. Then he knew that dainty little Hepatica was awake. He would carefully cover her up again with the dead leaves that she might not catch cold, after which he would kick up his heels in the funniest way, just because it made him feel so good.

Everywhere there were signs, if you had eyes to see and ears to hear them. And Peter had both. The Laughing Brook, which had been silent all winter because Jack Frost had bound it with ice, was laughing a great roar of a laugh, for its banks were very full, and that was a sign. The brown buds on the willows, which all winter long Jack Frost had pinched his hardest and failed to open, had split their little brown jackets at the first touch of the soft fingers of gentle Sister South Wind, and out of them had popped little gray pussies, and that was a sign. Farmer Brown had begun to clean up his cornfield, and that was a sign. There were signs everywhere, and every one of them made Peter feel happier.

But most of all Peter listened for something that he longed to hear. Every little while he would sit up and listen and listen, with his long ears standing straight up. Sometimes he would think he heard it, but he couldn't be sure. Then he would hold his breath and listen and listen and listen. What was he listening for? Why, for the loveliest sound he knows of—the voice of Winsome Bluebird.

"If I could only hear that," sighed Peter, "then I would know for sure that Mistress Spring is almost here, for Winsome Bluebird is her herald and she is never far behind." And this is how Peter Rabbit happened to forget all about those strange tracks he had found deep in the Green Forest.

First Aid to the Ailing House

—By— Roger B. Whitman

CLEANING A BOILER

LAST winter a neighbor of mine began to complain about his coal consumption. He said that he was burning more coal than he had the previous winter. As the months went on he growled more and more about the quantity of coal that he was shoveling. I finally went to his house for a look at his steam boiler. My first move was to open one of the clean-out doors above the firing door. As I suspected, I found the interior so clogged with dust that I wondered that the fire was able even to smolder.

I asked him why he had not kept the interior of his boiler cleaned out, and he said he had no idea it was necessary; that no one had ever told him anything about it. I found a flue-cleaning brush in a corner of the cellar, and poked it in to show him that what seemed to be a solid wall of dust was actually a passage. With a few explanations of what to do, I left him to give the boiler a thorough cleaning. He called me up the next morning to say that his fire was burning more briskly than it had been all winter, and that steam had come up in what was an incredibly short time.

His was an extreme case, for to all appearances the boiler had been running for years with no cleaning out of the dust that had collected within it. The cleaning of the inside of a boiler is of much more importance than home owners in general believe it to be. In burning, coal develops a fine dust that settles in the upper part of the boiler.

When the inside surfaces of a boiler are clean, the metal absorbs a maximum amount of heat from the gases and flames that pass over them. There is little waste of heat up the chimney. When dust is allowed to collect on the inside passages, it has the effect of insulation. Less of the available heat is absorbed by the metal, and the waste of heat up the chimney becomes greater. Consumption of fuel naturally goes up.

We Fool Ourselves

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WE LIKE to fool ourselves. We set
The clock ahead, and so we get
Up ev'ry morn at break of day—
We could have done it anyway.
Sent by the clock we set ahead,
We at "eleven" go to bed,
But really go to bed at ten—
Although we could have done it then.

We like to fool ourselves, and so
Say things we "own" for which we owe,
A lot of little things we craved—
We might have owned them had we saved.
Then, when a panic comes along.
We say that speculating's wrong,
To buy on margin is a shame—
Although, of course, we did the same.

We like to fool ourselves. To tell
The truth, we like to lie as well,
Deceive the others so and thus—
But no one quite as much as us.
We strut around, talk long and loud,
And hope to hypnotize the crowd,
But this is really why we boast—
We like to fool ourselves the most.

THE LANGUAGE OF YOUR HAND

By Leicester K. Davis

© Public Ledger, Inc.

THE method and manner of one's thinking play important parts in making life a success or failure. A life that is filled with the contentment which comes only from complete expression of the inner self, or one that is restless and dissatisfied through lack of it.

To the experienced palmist, the indication of the outlets through which both conscious and subconscious thought are striving to function are clearly indicated by the characteristics of the finger of Saturn.

The Scheming Finger of Saturn.

The predominant characteristics of this type are: (1) straightness, (2) the manner in which the finger, with hand extended, clings to the side of the forefinger.

As a rule, such a finger of Saturn seems extremely long when compared with the length of the forefinger. Its knuckles are full, with somewhat pronounced slenderness in the spaces between the joints. The entire finger, despite its length and prominence of the knuckles, is pleasing in contour. And while decidedly not overfleshed, neither is it what might be termed "skinny." The nail tip is inclined to taper, and the nail is usually of oval shape, well set. Under backward pressure the entire finger mght be considered stiff were it not for just a hint of flexibility.

A Saturnian finger of this kind, without unfavorable indications in the palm or elsewhere, denotes a clear-thinking, ambitious mind that plans its purposes with care and somewhat selfishly and keeps them very much a secret until the time for action arrives.

Correct Vacation Toggery

VACATIONING they will go—Vera, Mom and Flo. And they will enjoy themselves the more because their wardrobes after Sew-Your-Own are just exactly right.

Mother in this model will be mistaken for daughter many a time because her design and dots are so very youthful. She will have various frocks in various materials developed on this theme, and in one of them, at least, the dots will be red.

Dates for Dancing.

Vera, to the right, has a date for dancing and when her escort admiringly effuses some such nonsense as, "That gown must have come on the last boat from Paris" she will toss her dark head and say, "No foreign frocks for me. I Sew-My-Own." Her dress of soft flowered material with demure braid at the neck and hem almost makes a sweet old-fashioned girl of her, but the tailored collar and trim cut label her the sophisticated young thing that she really is.

Collegiate.

Only a snappy sophomore can fully appreciate just how smart are those buttons down the back of the model to the left. Her yoke and neckline are "Oh, so new, my deah"; her plaid as British as she would like her accent to be.

Best of good vacation wishes to the three of them from Sew-Your-Own.

Citizens To Honor "Old Glory" Flag

On Flag Day, Monday of next week, the citizens of the United States will pay tribute to "Old Glory," the emblem of our Republic, according to information received from the United States Marine Corps Recruiting Station in San Francisco.

Research has failed to prove definitely just who was responsible for the design of our national flag. But tradition points to Betsy Ross as the needle woman whose fingers wrought with loving care the first sample of the Stars and Stripes, which was almost identical with the flag as we know it today.

Late in the spring of 1776 her little shop in Philadelphia was visited by some distinguished patrons. A committee headed by George Washington called on Mrs. Ross and submitted a rough design of a new type of flag in which stars had been substituted for the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew.

The committee was of the opinion that the stars should be six pointed. But Mrs. Ross, so the story goes, showed them how a five pointed star could be made with one snip of her scissors, and her suggestion was adopted.

Unfortunately no record of this "first" flag has been preserved. However, Betsy told the story over and over again to her children and grandchildren, and it has been well authenticated by descendants of Mrs. Ross.

Are To Celebrate Mission Anniversary

The one hundred and fortieth anniversary of the founding of Mission San Juan Bautista at San Juan, in San Benito County, will be celebrated on June 26 and 27 with unusually elaborate pageantry and some novel sporting events.

Included in the activity program will be old time horse games such as were played on that very historic ground back in the days when Old Mexico ruled California. The climax will come in the form of a three mile cross country race, the finish of which will take place on the Mission field, where in recent years many a thrilling polo match has been staged.

One of the most interesting features of the pageant of San Juan Bautista this year will be the presentation of a spectacular romantic drama in the great outdoor theater of the Mission. This play, "Dolores of San Juan," written specially for the occasion by Lucy Cuddy, well known San Francisco playwright, is based on an adventure which actually occurred in the Monterey country nearly a century ago.

There will be two performances of the play on Sunday, June 27 at 3 p. m., and again the evening of the same day starting at 8 o'clock. It will be staged under the direction of Reginald Travors, prominent San Francisco producer. Adolph Otterstoin, of the San Jose State College, will be the musical director of a score composed by Francisca Vallejo McGettigan, direct descendant of an early day governor of this state.

Colma Man Injured In Leap From Blaze

His clothing a blazing torch, James Casey, 32, of Colma, shouted a warning to save a semi-invalid and her daughter from a flamnig death early Monday morning of this week before leaping from a second story window as fire swept through a San Francisco residence.

Casey was critically burned on the face, hands and body and in addition suffered possible internal injuries, a fractured wrist, shocks and bruises.

TWO AWAKEN

Awakened by his shouts, Mrs. J. M. Duke and her daughter, Marva, at whose home at 326 Maple street Casey was visiting, fled to safety through a back door.

Casey was asleep on a davenport when fire, apparently caused by a cigarette, started, firemen reported.

Casey was treated at Park Emergency hospital and later transferred to Mary's Help Hospital where his condition was said to be serious.

POINT SAN PEDRO ROCKAWAY BEACH

Here is an aftermath to the story we related last week about the carrier pigeon service achieved as a feature of the bridge fiesta, when Hermann Bryant, chief photographer of the San Francisco News, released the Princess Mercury IX from the Marin end of the bridge bearing photographs which she carried in eight minutes to the top of the News Building, Fourth and Mission streets. On Tuesday Hermann Bryant brought two of his pigeons to the Rockaway public school, and in the presence of Miss Alice Freeman, supervisor of the San Mateo County schools; Mrs. Wallace, principal; James Troglia, superintendent, and a crowd of wide eyed children, he tossed two carrier pigeons into the air, to circle for direction and altitude and finally to disappear into the foggy sky on their swift journey back to San Francisco.

It was a great experience for the youngsters.

In addition to the release of the birds, Photographer Bryant took a number of pictures of the children and their working projects, an up to date grocery store with real supplies, and a medieval castle constructed neatly of stiff paper made by the children under the direction of Principal Wallace and her junior teacher, Mrs. Hughes.

Mr. Rivas, who owned a summer home near the Rockaway school house, passed away last week in San Francisco after a brief illness. He was a retired hardware manufacturer.

The Pedro Point Improvement Association held a meeting, Friday evening of last week, at the Harry Rees tavern to discuss matters of interest to the community. The meeting was called by Karl Strutz, chairman.

Tiny Purser and his huge cat roared uphill and ground out some more from the mountain for the Cass Running place, which is soon to be constructed there. Tiny is 6 feet 3 inches tall. That's how he comes by his nickname. He's reputed to be one of the very best cat skinners in the state of California.

Bayshore To Open To San Jose

The San Francisco peninsula will be linked to San Jose by a new highway tomorrow when the final stretch of the Bayshore boulevard between Santa Clara and San Jose is formaly dedicated.

It was eleven years ago that the state launched its fast "through" highway skirting the peninsula shore of the bay. It was built San Francisco to South San Francisco, South San Francisco to Burlingame, Burlingame to San Mateo, San Mateo to Redwood City, Redwood City to Palo Alto, and Palo Alto to Santa Clara. The Santa Clara-San Jose link carries out the original plans.

Peninsula leaders will participate in barrier breaking ceremonies for the final stretch to be held tomorrow morning at the Agency underpass.

Purchases Must Receive Agent Okeh

County Executive Ernest A. Rolison, seated last week by the Board of Supervisors, has already taken steps to see that all county purchases are cleared through the purchasing agent.

In a letter to heads of all departments, Rolison ordered that the custom of submitting requisitions directly to the office of the controller be abandoned.

San Mateo People Glimpse Eclipse

A fleeting glimpse of a 6 per cent eclipse of the sun was visible to San Mateo County residents equipped with smoked glasses and old over exposed photographic negatives at 12:20 p. m. Tuesday of this week, according to astronomers.

The solar eclipse, the longest in 1238 years, was visible in totality only over a great area in the middle of the Pacific ocean, 1500 miles from the nearest land.

S. F. Art Museum Is Awarded Grant

A grant of $7500 has been awarded the San Francisco Museum of Art by the Carnegie Corporation of New York as confirmation of museum influence during the three years of its operation and to permit still further development in the coming year. The grant is to be used entirely for an expansion of educational functions of the museum.

Believing that a fuller enjoyment of art brings a fuller enjoyment of life the San Francisco Museum of Art now offers metropolitan opportunities to all communities of northern California through a travelling series of exhibitions and lectures. And to the people of the bay region it presents a course of study designed to stimulate confident personal pleasure in art.

The Carnegie course at the museum will consist of weekly two hour sessions of lecture, demonstration, experiment and discussion over a period of 30 weeks, beginning in October and ending in May. Subjects will include fundamentals of seeing and drawing, history of art, esthetics and art in its application to everyday life and as a sharpening of the preceptions for more vivid experience.

ORGANIZATIONS AND CITIZENS JOIN IN FIESTA

Pageantry, Music, Displays And Costume Ball Were Major Features

were George Bauman and Frank Calverley.

On display in the Bonvitas Hall, headquarters for the valley fiesta activities, were six fine oil paintings depicting Spanish life in early days in California. Through the courtesy of Mrs. Molly Carrillo and Mrs. George Burgis, her sister, who are members of the well known Castro family of early California days, these paintings were loaned to the fiesta committee.

CENTER PAGEANT

A capacity crowd attended the pageant presented, Tuesday evening of last week, at the community center. Fred Enderlin directed and read script for the production.

Climax of the pageant showed the Golden Gate Bridge in miniature, lighted as is the real bridge and with a tiny model of the China Clipper moving over it.

Street singers under the direction of Mrs. Edward Armanino, assisted by Miss Elda Assolino and Miss Jeannette Miller of Visitacion Valley School, provided interesting melody with accordion accompaniment for both indoor and outdoor activities of the fiesta.

POEM READ

As part of the dedication ceremony at Altar Rock, May 30, a poem, "Visitacion Valley," written by Viola Happy for the Bayshore Highway opening and dedication in 1929, was read by George Allen.

As a fitting climax and closing event for the week of fiesta celebration in Visitacion Valley, a grand costume ball was held at the Bonvitas Hall, Wednesday evening of last week. The affair was well attended and dancers seemed enthusiastically happy.

Visitacion residents attended and visited many fiesta activities outside the valley—in San Francisco, Bayshore City and down the peninsula.

Camp Celebrates Fiesta At Meet

Fiesta spirit prevailed at a recent meeting and banquet of Fernleaf Camp No. 808, W. O. W. Mrs. Walter Miller, chairman of the social committee, who was garbed in a Spanish gipsy costume, welcomed all guests.

Following the business session, conducted by Consul Commander Frances Evanson, 65 members and guests were served at banquet tables decorated in blue and gold fiesta colors. The menu included Spanish enchiladas, corn chips, many kinds of sandwiches, tea, coffee and beer.

VISITORS

Spruce Camp of Alameda sent 25 members to the meeting. A horse shoe team from Fernleaf and one from the visiting camp pitched for honors. Fernleaf won the tourney. Members and guests danced.

Mrs. Miller, social chairman, wishes to thank her assistants, Mrs. William Nutter, Mrs. E. Peters, Mrs. D. Fields, Mrs. J. Thorne and Louis Eisenbeis.

Shower Is Given For Bride To Be

Mrs. Walter V. Miller, assisted by her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Marcus Brieger, gave a delightful and artistically planned shower for a bride-to-be, Miss Laura W. Peters of Visitacion Valley.

Refreshments were served at tables-for-four, each especially decorated with individual favors.

Bayshore Scouts Hold Open House

Bayshore Girl Scouts held open house for their mothers, Tuesday evening of this week, under the direction of their troup leader, Mrs. Berta Hughes.

Mrs. Franzen, one of the committeemen, reported that the troop would continue to stay under the direction of the San Francisco Council. She turned over a $25 donation to the scouts from the Bayshore Protective Association. The troop will use this fund to meet per capita dues and other expenses.

At the close of the meeting refreshments, prepared by the girls, were served.

Daughter Of Valley Resident Weds

Miss Laura Peters, daughter of Mrs. Emil Peters of 223 Raymond avenue, became the bride of Wayne Roy Greenwood, San Francisco radio operator, Saturday of last week.

The wedding ceremony took place at St. Mathew's Lutheran Church in San Francisco and a reception was held at the W. O. W. Hall in the valley. Dancing was enjoyed and a delicious wedding supper was served at 11 o'clock.

Friends and relatives assisted the mother of the bride in receiving and serving guests.

The bride was charming in a lace gown of turquoise blue. She wore a short halo veil and carried a bridal bouquet of lilies of the valley and white bouvardia.

Advertising Speaks for Industry

WE ARE all members of a privileged class today. We don't have to wait months for news, travelling by word of mouth, to reach us. If a manufacturer in a distant city produces a labor saving device, or an application to conceal birthmarks, these boons are brought to our attention at once through advertising. Advertising is the great voice of industry which we are all privileged to hear.

Don't Irritate Gas Bloating

If you want to really GET RID OF GAS and terrible bloating, don't expect to do it by just doctoring your stomach with harsh, irritating alkalies and "gas tablets." Most GAS is lodged in the stomach and upper intestine and is due to old poisonous matter in the constipated bowels that are loaded with ill-causing bacteria.

If your constipation is of long standing, enormous quantities of dangerous bacteria accumulate. Then your digestion is upset. GAS often presses heart and lungs, making life miserable.

You can't eat or sleep. Your head aches. Your back aches. Your complexion is sallow and pimply. Your breath is foul. You are a sick, grouchy, wretched, unhappy person. YOUR SYSTEM IS POISONED.

Thousands of sufferers have found in Adlerika the quick, scientific way to rid their systems of harmful bacteria. Adlerika rids you of gas and cleans foul poisons out of BOTH upper and lower bowels. Give your bowels a REAL cleansing with Adlerika. Get rid of GAS. Adlerika does not gripe—is not habit forming. At all Leading Druggists.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.

Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

CHAPTER I

With a nice sense of dramatic values, the heel of Brooke Reyburn's shoe turned sharply as she ran across the street. She went down on one knee just as the traffic light turned green. She had a confused sense of an automobile bearing down on her, the screech of brakes, of panting cars, of arms lifting her to the sidewalk.

"Hurt?" a voice demanded.

"I'm all right, really I am. It was my silly heel that threw me," she assured breathlessly, even as she moved her knee experimentally. It worked. It wasn't broken.

"Why wear such fool heels? If you're not hurt, why did you wince?"

The man's voice was husky; his eyes had a third-degree intentness which roused a little demon of opposition. Brooke retorted crisply:

"If you insist upon probing the secrets of my young life, I think I've skinned my knee."

She thought the man spoke as she merged in the stream of passers-by. She passed the building to which she had been hurrying to keep an appointment when she crossed the street. She wouldn't go in yet, she'd better wait till her still thumping heart quieted before she entered the offices of Stewart and Stewart, Attorneys at Law, she had too much pride to appear there breathless and shaken. That had been a narrow escape, not only for her, but for the man who had snatched her from the path of that speeding car, and—horrible thought—she hadn't even said "Thank you!"

If only she knew who he was she could write to him, but he might have been a stranger passing through the city whom she never would see again. In that case she would have to bear always this pricking sense of being ashamed of herself, it would bring her sitting straight up in bed when she thought of it at night.

She stopped at a flower shop. Its color and beauty were like a soothing hand on her smarting conscience. The air had but a hint of the crispness of early October.

Overhead a steeple clock chimed. The sound reminded Brooke of her engagement. She winced as she moved.

After a furtive look about, she examined her knee. Skinned. She had known it. Shreds of her silk stocking clung to the raw flesh. She winced as her lowered skirt scraped it. Her unknown rescuer need not fear that she would forget that lesson in a hurry, she thought as she entered the office of the junior partner of Stewart and Stewart.

Where was Mr. Jed Stewart?

There was an open book on his large flat desk. The title fairly jumped at her.

UNDERWOOD ON WILLS

Brooke's heart did a nose-dive. Did that particular book on that particular desk mean that Stewart and Stewart were preparing to contest the will in which she had been named residuary legatee?

Silly, she derided herself, wasn't the firm executor of the estate of Mary Amanda Dane? Hadn't Mr. Jed Stewart notified her that the will had been allowed, that she had acquired a fortune, hadn't he asked her to be at his office today at four? It was her late shake-up and this gloomy room which had started her imagination on the rampage. Where it wasn't knotty pine it was walled with books impressively, if mustily, bound in calf.

From outside came faint distant noises in the corridor; footsteps thudding, scuffing, springing past; the incessant clang of elevator doors. Inside, "Tick-tock! Tick-tock!" the wall clock marked time for the quick procession of the minutes.

And the minutes were marching along. Where was Mr. Stewart? Was it part of legal procedure to keep clients in suspense? The secretary in the outer office had shown her into this room, had said that she was expected, that the junior partner was in conference but would be at liberty in a few moments.

Restlessly she crossed to the window. She slipped behind one of the hangings to shut off the electric light in the room behind her. What a view! Roofs. Tiers of roofs alive with pigeons. Patches of bright blue broke up the pattern of gray clouds. Weather vanes pointed to the north. Innumerable wires etched gigantic cobwebs against the sky. Skylights shone like sheets of molten brass as they reflected the sun.

Her eyes lingered on the roofs. Beneath them business units were pitched together. Honesty and fraud; virtue and vice; ups and downs; efficiency and stupidity; ambition and lethargy; each unit moving in its own orbit and each thinking itself of supreme importance in the complicated pattern of the business world. She had been buffeting her way in it for five years.

"Miss Reyburn ought to be here, Mark, but I suppose like the majority of women she has no idea of the value of a man's time."

The annoyed comment in the room behind her snapped Brooke out of her reflections. How like a man to assume that she was at fault. She would make a dramatic entrance, and then—

"Glad she is late. I told you, Jed, that I didn't want to meet her. It was a beau geste for her to offer me half of the money, all of which should be mine by inheritance. I'll make my get-away before she comes. Let her move into Lookout House pronto. I'm the only person in the world with the right to contest Aunt Mary Amanda Dane's will, and, much as I would like to own the family heirlooms and add her part of the house to mine, I won't do that. I would have to prove 'undue influence' or 'unsound mind,' wouldn't I? How could I do that when under oath I would have to acknowledge that my aunt had said she would cut me out of her will? The fact that I didn't believe she would do it wouldn't cut any ice with the court. Nothing doing. I've had publicity enough over my domestic casualty to last the rest of my life."

"I Told You, Jed, That I Didn't Want to Meet Her."

Brooke's hand dropped from the hanging. That must be Mark Trent's deep voice tinged with anger. By "her" did he mean herself? So he thought her offer to share with him merely a beau geste. Should she have refused to take any of the legacy? This was hardly the tactful moment to make her entrance. He was going. As soon a the door closed, she would appear and explain to Mr. Stewart why she had been at the window; meantime she would be strictly honorable and not listen. She stuffed her fingers into her ears.

At the same moment on the other side of the hangings, Jed Stewart was saying:

"I never did understand why Lookout House was cut in two, Mark."

"It wasn't. Grandfather Trent had two houses built exactly alike, one for his daughter, Mary Amanda, and one for his son, my father; the Other House, the family called ours. Not satisfied with that, he had them set side by side on a rocky promontory—he intended them for summer homes only—with doors through the library downstairs and the hall on the second floor and connecting balconies; he was a glutton for balconies. Aunt Mary Amanda recently has lived there the year round. I inherited Father's house, but I haven't lived there since—well, for three years. It has been closed. I haven't rented it because I thought it might be unpleasant for my aunt to have strangers near when she was wheeled into the garden which serves for both places. Now, see what she does to me. She picks up this girl and later, while I'm starting a branch office in South America, leaves her her half of the real estate and all her money. Well, I'll be off. I have a date."

"Don't go, Mark. I asked Miss Reyburn to come here this afternoon to tell her what financial arrangements have been made for her, but principally to get you two face to face so that we could straighten out this mess about the personal property in the house."

"Mess! Do you call a sound, unbreakable will a mess? Aunt Mary Amanda Dane warned me that if I married Lola she would cut me off with the proverbial shilling; then, when my divorce became necessary, she was more opposed to it than she had been to the marriage. Can you beat that for inconsistency? I've always had a hunch that the French man and wife who have worked for and worked Mary Amanda for years might hypnotize her into leaving all her property to them—I warned her against them and somehow they found out and have hated me ever since—but I didn't think she would leave it to a comparative stranger. In my opinion, Clotilde and Henri Jacques are no better than a couple of bandits; they'll bear watching. I don't trust the Reyburn female either, her fine Italian hand crops up all through that will, but I don't like the idea of a girl living in the same house with them. However, she'd probably think I had an axe to grind if I warned her."

"Yellow journals and hectic fiction to the contrary, lawyers don't talk about the affairs of a client, even to their best friend, fella."

"Don't blow up like a pouter pigeon, Jed. Of course I didn't expect you to tell me; equally, of course, I wouldn't try to upset that will. My aunt's High Church convictions wouldn't permit her to approve of my separation from a wife who had been sordidly unfaithful. I thought she might soften toward me when Lola married the third time, but evidently not. If she wanted to bequeath her house, her money, and her jewels to a girl she had picked up via radio, okay. But why didn't she tell me about the Reyburn female? Why not ask me to meet her before I went to South America? That's what makes me suspicious. The secrecy of their friendship. Was the girl afraid that if I knew I would try to influence my aunt against her? If I was so dense, how do you suppose she got wise to Mary Amanda's fortune? I understand that she had supper and spent a night with her once a week, the night the companion-nurse had off. She must have had a strong motive to commute 20 miles after business hours. She's a fashion adviser in one of the big shops, isn't she?"

"Yep. Worked up from a model. Mary Amanda Dane tuned in on the radio one morning just as Brooke Reyburn was giving her fashion talk. She fell in love with her voice, and wrote to the girl asking what the well-dressed invalid tied to a wheel chair was wearing. Miss Reyburn answered with such sympathetic understanding that your aunt invited her to Lookout House."

Spots in America That Resist the Melting Pot

Festivals of Various Kinds Call Attention to "Bits of Europe" Here.

"It takes celebrations like a tulip festival to call one's attention to the many 'bits of Europe' scattered throughout the United States," says a bulletin from the National Geographic society.

"Recently thousands of flower-loving Americans descended on Holland, Michigan, to witness the town's annual tulip festival. The gay blooms stretching for eight miles, lure visitors each spring to this largely Dutch community sprinkled with Dutch names and, for the festival period, with residents in Dutch costumes.

A "Little Greece" in Florida.

"Holland is one of the largest Dutch communities in the United States. Until recently, many of its factory workers spoke only Dutch, and neighboring farmers wore wooden shoes.

"Tarpon Springs, about half way down the west coast of the Florida peninsula, is the home of many swarthy, mustachioed Greek sponge divers and their families. They came to the warm blue waters of Florida fisheries from the sponge fishing grounds of the Mediterranean, and have made Tarpon Springs famous as a 'sponge city.' Their brightly painted diving boats are patterned after those used in Greek waters. The town supports a Greek Orthodox church, and on January 6 annually celebrates Greek Cross day, a religious fete brought from the homeland.

"Northwestern Pennsylvania has its Russians. Nearly half a century ago, some 'Old Believers,' descendants of seceders from the Russian church in the Seventeenth century, settled in Erie. The Russian colony now numbers about 2,000 inhabitants. Folk songs are sung to balalaika accompaniment by bearded men and long-haired women.

Finns Settled in Forest Lands.

"Although Finns dwell in small numbers in every state in the Union, they have not found the South appealing, and have settled chiefly in Michigan, Minnesota, Massachusetts, and Washington. From Finland, 'the Land of a Thousand Lakes,' they have been especially drawn to Minnesota. Their physical stamina and experience as lumberjacks in Finland's vast forests have fitted many of them particularly well to take part in America's lumber industry.

"The Finns retain their love of education, flocking to schools and night classes. As in their home land, they build log bathhouses in which to take steam baths, and carve from birchwood skis which carry them over the fields in rigorous winters. Finland, Suomi, Toimi, and Toivola are some Minnesota place names that tell of Finnish population.

Shipping Lures Dalmatians.

"For centuries Dalmatians have either tilled the soil or sailed under Ragusan and other flags all over the world. Today these dark, spirited people, with blood of bold sea rovers in their veins, not only man the orange-sailed fishing boats off the Dalmatian coast, but they man American ships and work in fisheries of Louisiana, Florida, and California.

"From green vineyards, gray olive groves, fig and orange orchards steeped in almost perpetual sunshine along the Dalmatian coast, have come many of the large commercial fruit growers of the Pacific coast, particularly those in Santa Cruz and Santa Clara counties. Watsonville, south of San Francisco, has a population almost entirely Yugoslavian.

"The majority of fishermen in Provincetown, Massachusetts, are Portuguese. Their ancestors sailed there on whalers from Portugal and the Azores. The city directory is filled with names that sound strange among those of most New England towns: last names such as Silva, Ramos, Furtado, Costa, Zora, Dutra, Cabral, Almeda, Agna, and Corea."

Somehow the Proverb Sounded a Bit Off

He had only recently joined the ranks of politicians, and he was anxious that his first speech to his prospective constituents should be a great success, says London Answers.

He spoke for a long time, warning his hearers of the dangers of war and the importance of keeping a large army. Wishing to finish with some quotation, he thought of the proverb about locking the stable door. But he wanted to be a bit more original.

Suddenly he had a brain-wave. "Ladies and gentlemen," he cried, "don't, I beg of you—don't wait till your house catches fire before calling the fire brigade."

Your Job

DO YOU realize that your job is the most important affair in the world, just because it is your job? The way you look at your job makes all the difference to your career. Do you regard it only as a money-making stunt? Or do you consider it a position to be proud of?

If you put your heart and soul into your effort, you are bound to make good and will wake up one fine morning to discover that you are one of the indispensables. The world respects you because it cannot get along without you.—Geoffrey Rhodes.

Firestone TIRES

GIVE YOU GREATER PROTECTION AGAINST SKIDDING AND BLOWOUTS

YOU will know the minute you see this tire why car owners everywhere call it the greatest tire ever made to sell at these low prices. The deeper, wider, flatter non-skid tread made of tough, long wearing rubber will give you protection against dangerous skidding.

But tires cannot be judged on tread alone. Under the tread of Firestone Standard Tires are two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords. This Firestone patented construction feature binds the tread and cord body into one inseparable unit. Every cotton fiber in every cord in every ply is saturated and coated with pure liquid rubber which counteracts the internal friction and heat that ordinarily destroy tire life. This Firestone patented process of Gum-Dipping gives greater protection against blowouts and is used only in Firestone Tires.

SYMPHONY HAS FAMED GUESTS

Both Dr. Reiser-Alfred Keller Have Excellent Music Background

On Monday of next week, at the Alcazar Theater, at 8:20 o'clock, the Federal Symphony of San Francisco will welcome as guest conductor Dr. Alois Reiser and as guest soloist Alfred Keller, violinist.

Recently appointed as supervisor and conductor of the Oakland Project, Dr. Reiser has the benefit of a splendid background, both as musician and conductor. He is a graduate from the conservatory of Prague and a pupil of Anton Dvorak. As cello soloist he toured Europe and later extended his activities to the conducting field when he was engaged at the Prague Opera. At the Metropolitan Opera he conducted for the Russian Ballet.

NOTED VIOLINIST

Alfred Keller, the violin soloist, studied in Europe with Carl Flesch and Ottokar Sevcik. He was concertmaster of the Portland Symphony Orchestra under William Van Hoogstraten. For two years he played in the New York Symphony under Walter Damrosch and was principal violinist in Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra under Fritz Reiner and Eugene Goosens. Besides being a fine musician, Keller is a graduate of the Cincinnati Law School.

Keller will play the Concerto in D Major of Beethoven. Reiser opens the first half of the program with the Fifth Symphony of Tschaikowsky. On the second half the Overture to Oberon of Weber; Beethoven's Concerto in D Major and The Sorcerer's Apprentice of Dukas concludes the music for Monday night.
